2017 Midwest School for Women Workers

“Women Rising”

Sunday, July 16 – Thursday, July 20

Hosted by the UW School for Workers
Madison, Wisconsin

Participants will attend workshops and plenary sessions on current economic policy issues affecting unions and workers in the US and globally, the future of labor, and workers' efforts towards improving workers' rights.

Guest speakers include an organizer of the Women's March in Washington, DC, a leader in protecting workers in the food system, and immigrant workers' rights leaders. Additional guest speakers and instructors at the Midwest School are university-based labor educators. Presenters will also include experienced union leaders, labor activists, attorneys, and community leaders.

Special events include a welcome reception, a closing banquet, a graduation ceremony, a Wisconsin state capitol tour, labor history, and cultural activities. Stay tuned for updates on speakers, workshops, and more on our Facebook Page and website.

What is the Midwest School for Women Workers?

The Midwest School for Women Workers brings together union women to develop leadership skills, understand the challenges and issues facing the labor movement, and share experiences.

Held annually since 1976, the school equips women to be more active and effective leaders in their unions and to build solidarity among women workers.

The Midwest School for Women is sponsored by the United Association for Labor Education (UALE).

The UW School for Workers will host the 2017 School for Women Workers in Madison, Wisconsin. The School for Workers is the labor education department of the University of Wisconsin-Extension. Each year we offer hundreds of programs to thousands of union representatives, officers, members, and employer representatives.
